adidas AG

Member since: Jan 01 2010

As a pioneer member, the adidas Group has been involved with the Better Cotton Initiative from the very beginning. As part of its involvement, the adidas Group has committed to using 100% Sustainable Cotton in all its brands by 2018.

To achieve this target, the adidas Group has set incremental annual targets for the quantity of 'Better Cotton' that will be used: 5% by 2012; 40% by 2015; 100% Sustainable Cotton by 2018.

Also, as a private partner of the Better Cotton Fast Track, the adidas Group is investing in the program and is therefore working with other leading brands and funders to help sustainable cotton production go mainstream.

Hennes & Mauritz AB

Member since: Jan 01 2010

Cotton is the raw material H&M use the most. Our aim is for all cotton in our range to come from more sustainable sources by 2020 at the latest. Better Cotton, organic and recycled cotton are types of cotton that we see as the keys to achieving this target. Since 2010, we have been the biggest user of certified organic cotton worldwide, according to Textile Exchange's Global Market Report on Sustainable Textiles. Additionally, we will continue to increase the use of other conscious materials, like recycled polyester and wool. H&M has been actively involved in the Better Cotton Initiative (BCI) since its inception in 2004, and are also an elected member of the organisation's council. We regard the BCI as the key initiative to help us reach our goal of sourcing all cotton in our range from sustainable sources by 2020.

Ikea Supply AG

Member since: Jan 01 2010

Cotton is one of our most important materials. It's in some of our best-loved products – from sofas, to cushions and bed sheets. We know that conventional cotton farming can be harmful for the environment and the people who grow it, so we wanted to do something about it. That's why we are a founding member of the BCI.

IKEA is working to make cotton-farming better for people and the planet. Change is already happening on farms, in our product range and across the cotton industry. Today, 69% of the cotton we use is Better Cotton and we're aiming for 100% by 2015.

Improving cotton is part of our People & Planet Positive sustainability strategy, which includes ambitious targets for transforming our business and beyond, including sourcing more sustainable raw materials. We're also improving the lives of people in cotton growing communities through the IKEA Foundation, the philanthropic arm of IKEA Group, helping to raise awareness of the importance of education, investing in improving schools and health facilities.

Marks and Spencer plc

Member since: Jan 01 2010

Cotton plays an important part of Marks & Spencer's eco and ethical programme, Plan A. When sourced in a responsible way, it can be a very beneficial crop for farmers and their communities. Through Plan A we continue to significantly increase the amount of responsibly sourced cotton used in our products, whether that cotton is Fairtrade, Organic, recycled or farmed to BCI standards. We are founder members of the Better Cotton Initiative and have supported the development BCI projects across the world. We directly fund our own cotton project in India which has demonstrated the success that BCI can have in changing the cotton industry forever.
